Our goal:

Our goal:

→ Look at what goes "wrong" in our daily communications

Our goal:

- Look at what goes "wrong" in our daily communications
- Examine how we can instead communicate so that all parties feel heard.

Integrity

Integrity, when lost...

Integrity, when lost...

→ We lose trust from others

Integrity, when lost...

- We lose trust from others
- It diminishes our relationship with ourselves

Integrity, when lost...

- We lose trust from others
- It diminishes our relationship with ourselves
- We're less productive, as individuals, and as organizations

Integrity, when lost...

- We lose trust from others
- It diminishes our relationship with ourselves
- We're less productive, as individuals, and as organizations

- But it's approximately impossible to always be in integrity with our word, especially if it involves doing things on time!

3. Acknowledge the impact on the other person (and maybe also on you)
4. And say what you will put in place so that it won't happen that way again (and then put that thing in place immediately!)

Integrity restored, in four simple steps:

→ Example:

According to the schedule I was supposed to start this talk at 10:15 this morning, and I didn't start at 10:15. The impact is that we're running a few minutes behind schedule, and either we have less time for discussion or you have less time for lunch. What I will do next time is set an alarm on my phone for 3 minutes before start time, so I can end any other conversations in time to begin with you as promised, on time.
